purposes. In this regard Government of India have also formulated a National Land Use Policy Outline (NLPO) and 19 point decision on Land Use were adopted. The NLPO has been circulated to all the States/UTs and concerned Central Ministries/Organisations for its implementation.The NLPO inter-alia envisages restructuring the Urban Policy to ensure that highly productive land is not taken away. Besides, few States and UTs have taken the legislative and regulatory measures for diversion/ acquiring agricultural land for non-agricuitural purposes.

In order to conserve ground water resources conjuctive use of surface and ground water resources has been encouraged. The National Water Policy prohibits the over-use of ground water in excess of annual recharge. A model Bill for Control and Regulation of Ground Waterhas also been circulated to States by Centre to serve as legal basis of ground water development, the Central Ground Water Board has circulated to the State Governments a manual to serve as guidelines for formulation of ground water recharge schemes. Integrated water-shed development and construction of ground water dams-underground Bandharas which are sub-surface barriers and retard natural ground water flow and store water below ground surface is also being advocated to the states, as a ground water conservation measure.
